

Choose your track for the way you ride

Snowmobile manufacturers do a great job of equipping their new machines with a track that meets the needs of a wide variety of users in a wide variety of conditions. And well over 90 percent of those tracks are made by Camoplast, too.

But many of us get most of our miles in specific conditions that lend themselves to more specialized tracks. So it makes a lot of sense for many of us to switch to a track that is made specifically for the places we ride, the kind of snow we ride in, and the kind of riding we do most of the time. And that's why Camoplast makes such a huge variety of snowmobile tracks.

For instance, if you need to be first across the lake, you need a track with outstanding high speed performance. Or if you ride hilly, icy trails most of the time, you need added traction for performance and safety. If you want to dominate the ditch lines or go boondocking, you need a different kind of extra traction for deep, loose snow. Or if you are a mountain rider, you want ultimate traction without worrying about groomed trails. And if you aspire to racing success, you need a specialized track to be competitive in your chosen type of competition.
